Read the passage carefully and answer the following questions. Once upon a time, in a quaint village nestled between rolling hills, lived a young girl named Meera and her father, Raghav. They owned a 5-hectare piece of land, untouched and fertile, waiting for life to bloom upon it. Unlike the other villagers who grew the same sorts of crops year after year, exhausting the soil, Meera and her father dreamt of cultivating their land differently. They envisioned vibrant fields of diverse crops that would nourish the earth and bring prosperity. However, their vision was met with skepticism. The villagers scoffed at the idea, saying, "Why change what has always worked? Stick to the usual sorts of crops. It's risky to experiment!" But Meera and Raghav were determined. They constructed a water source at the far end of their field, ensuring a reliable supply, and began to work tirelessly, learning about crop diversification and sustainable farming practices. As seasons passed, their land turned into a thriving patchwork of colors—golden grains swayed next to lush green vegetables, _____ vibrant flowers danced under the sun. The water percolated through the soil, keeping the crops nourished even during dry spells. Their success didn't go unnoticed. Curious villagers began to gather, watching Meera and her father conduct their daily tasks with care and precision. They witnessed how the diversified crops improved the soil's health and increased yields. Inspired by their journey, Meera founded an organization called "Harit Bhoomi" (Green Earth) to educate farmers about crop diversification. She conducted workshops under the old banyan tree, explaining the importance of rotating different sorts of crops to maintain soil fertility. She even showed them how water, when managed properly, could percolate efficiently, conserving resources. At first, only a few attended, but as word spread of Meera's successful harvests, more villagers came, eager to learn. They realized that her methods were not just innovative but also sustainable. In time, the village transformed, with fields bursting with different sorts of produce, enriching both the land and the people's lives. Meera and Raghav's dream had not only come true but had also inspired a whole community to embrace change and growth. And under the shade of that banyan tree, surrounded by hopeful farmers, Meera knew this was just the beginning of a new era for the village.
